

though her disease was such as greatly to interrupt her quiet rest & repose in the promises of the Saviour, yet all her desire was after him, all earthly cares had ceased, she could resign everything to the Lord and only longed for a fuller manifestation of his pardoning love to her soul.

Towards the night, which is generally the highest stage of the fever & when the disorder takes a turn either for the better or the worse, we found that nature was nearly exhausted with the peated attacks which she had endured; yet it was delightful to behold her gaining fresh spiritual strength, her soul stayed simply on Jesus, & deriving consolation from his all-sufficiency & willingness to save.
She was sensible to the last, but through weakness slept a few hours for a few hours before she departed, about $\frac{1}{2}$ past 11 o'clock on the night of the 28th M^r. her soul took its eternal flight - the disembodied spirit is now in the presence of her Lord & Saviour to go out no more for ever - reaping the rich reward of a boundless eternity.]

[During this time M^r. D. was also very ill, the fever had made considerable progress & at times we were left in great suspense as to its result, he had however materially better'd for the better; he is at present free from fever, & his chief suffering is from the very severe loss he has sustained in the removal of a most affectionate wife. But, blessed be God.
